RAISE ARCHES EASILY.

Contractor Puts Up Concrete Ceilings Cheaply and Simply.

In describing a concrete residence that is being built in one of Philadelphia's suburbs, a writer in Cement Age takes occasion to call attention to some methods that are being employed by the builder, who is also the owner of the house. The construction of the library ceiling, wood, and upon this a layer of sand nicely graded. The tiles with which the ceiling was to be decorated were laid along the groin guides, upside down, and over the wire mesh and pipes, and then the wet concrete was poured over the whole.

The spring of the arch was determined by bending a long, pliable strip of wood from column to column. Underneath and above these strips, which defined the position and curve of the groins, were placed empty boxes and other waste material light in weight but taking up space. On top of this collection was placed another layer of earth, and the concrete was poured upon this a layer of sand nicely graded. The tiles with which the ceiling was to be decorated were laid along the groin guides, upside down, and over the wire mesh and pipes, and then the wet concrete was poured over the whole.

FLIES STOP FAST TRAIN.

Cloud of Billions of Insects Closes Engine of Grand Trunk Flyer.

A few days ago the Grand Trunk flyer going east was in hard luck, says the Toronto Globe. At Napawan, the steam box on the big engine got overworked, or something, and refused to continue the journey. The timely arrival of a freight train helped. The cars were shunted to a siding and the freight engine brought into commission on the express, taking it as far as Brockville, when another large engine was secured.

Now comes the peculiar part of the trouble of the train. When about twenty miles out of Cornwall it ran into a sea of peculiar flies. There were millions of them—perhaps billions, but the train was going so fast it was impossible to count them. The cars became quite dark as the train plowed through the mass of insects, and then the train came to another sudden stop. The engine was full of flies. The little things were ground into a mass in the driving rod. They were in everything on the engine.

LOBSTERS IN THE PACIFIC.

Efforts to Raise Delicacy Off Victoria, B. C. Show Gratifying Results.

Encouraged by the success which has marked the experiment with lobsters in the Sooke basin, near Victoria, B. C., another carload of lobsters for planting purposes will be shipped to the Pacific coast from Halifax, N. S., says the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Sooke basin, where the experiment has been made in lobster culture, is on the north side of the Strait of Fuca, almost directly across from Port Angeles, this state.

The success which has attended the effort in Sooke basin has been surprising and gratifying, and the Halifax shipment seems to indicate that the enterprise has passed the experimental stage.

SEA SHELL BRINGS LOVER.

Cornish Girl's Challenge Accepted by California Miner and Wedding Will Soon Take Place.

The details of a pretty Cornish romance have come to hand. Miss Maude Bettison of St. Blazey, Cornwall, four years ago was staying at Penzance, and received many offers of marriage, but she rejected them all, says the London Daily News. On the eve of returning to St. Blazey she was walking on the promenade, and in a spirit of mischief wrote on a scrap of paper: "Whoever in this world shall find me shall win my love."

Miss Bettison then, the paper in a small sea shell, and popped it under a rose bush in Morra gardens.

Next morning the prompt envelope and its contents were found by Edward J. Berryman of Castle Gate, Landeran, Cornwall, who was on a visit to his native country after years spent in digging for gold in California. He accepted the challenge and began the quest for the writer. He was on the point of following it to St. Blazey when a cable message recalled him to California. Three years later he arrived at St. Blazey with the precious note. Miss Bettison, however, had gone on a visit to Colombo, Ceylon, and the young gentleman set out for Colombo.

He met Miss Bettison, and it was a case of love at first sight. Soon an engagement was announced, and now Miss Bettison is making the journey to the shores of the Pacific, where the wedding is to take place at an early date.

THE BOTHERSOME CHILD.

How often Mrs. Jones bewails the badness of Mrs. Brown's small fry, and dreads her calls because Tommy and Mary are sure to get into mischief. Yet the kiddies may be bad merely because unoccupied. We grown-ups forget the restlessness of children, we expect them to sit still as mice through long, haranguing sermons and the outrageous price of meat. How many of us are passive under boredom—and that is what children visiting with their mother, generally are.

A woman said recently: "I dread to have my cousin call on me. Small Kate tarts along with her—and is into everything in the house. The last time she was here she slipped into the dining room and emptied the salt, sugar and pepper found on the sideboard, under the dining room table. I always lock all my doors each time I see her coming."

In every household where there are no children, a few toys should be kept out when children come to call. The grown-ups will enjoy the visit and will the babies.
